

Conditions of Access and Use

All databases offered by the Hohenheim Datalab are available to you free of charge for your studies or scientific work.

By using the Datalab, you agree to use the contents responsibly and in particular to adhere to the respective rights of use and applicable copyright.

It is permissible for the members of the Faculty of Business, Economics and Social Sciences and authorized users to carry out research for themselves and to copy a selection of the data they have researched to their RAM.

Systematic downloading of large amounts of data, in particular using special software (robots, spider, crawler) or the creation of copies for commercial purposes are prohibited. It is also prohibited to set up your own personal archive. If you still need large amounts of data from a database (in particular BLOOMBERG), then please contact us first in order to avoid the database being unnecessarily blocked.

It is prohibited to pass along the data in whole or in part - regardless of whether this is done with an electronic data carrier, with remote data transfer, or as printed copies. It is also prohibited to give third parties access to the saved data or to convey the information commercially. Commercial use or service for industrial clients are prohibited.

If we see that the access rights are being abused, we retain the right to block your access to the Hohenheim Datalab.

If one of the database contracts is not extended by the University, you will be notified quickly. After termination of a contract, you are obligated to destroy any data you have already downloaded and are not allowed to use the data for any further projects / publications.

As the datalab Hohenheim is financed by third-party funds, you are obliged to acknowledge the use of the datalab Hohenheim in your publications, term papers etc. Therefore, please use the following phrase:

We gratefully acknowledge access to Datastream/Bloomberg etc. ... provided by DA-LAHO, University of Hohenheim.
